

CSCTFL 2018
Preliminary List of Sessions
(as of December 6, 2017)

Session 1- Friday 7:45 AM – 8:45 AM

From Repetition to Imitation: Strategies to Improve Spanish Pronunciation

Presenters: Monica Millan and Marisol Garrido, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti, MI; Margarita Obregón, Western Illinois University, Macomb, IL

Previous studies have shown that imitation, as opposed to meaningless repetition and drilling, activates the use of different areas of the brain which may lead to a more native-like production. Using gesture and speech as two intertwined forces, this session focuses on the acquisition of phonology and discusses pedagogy-oriented activities that aim to imitate intonation, rhythm, and body movement as an effective tool in teaching and learning of L2 pronunciation.

Film: More Than Fluff

Presenter: Andrea Behn, Parker High School, Janesville, WI

Films are more than an incentive for students or a filler between units. They offer students a means to practice listening to different accents, learn culture, and engage in a story that will give them something to talk about. This session will provide a framework for providing lessons that address the interpretive and presentational modes, and offer ideas for activities in the interpersonal mode. Participants will see how to use authentic resources for film and how to "trick" students into learning new structures and vocabulary. Examples will be given in French and a framework will be given in English.

Exhibitor Session: Student Engagement: Making Learning Stick in the World Language Classroom

Presenter: Myriam Louzao, Santillana USA, Doral, FL

Learning a new language requires students to manipulate enormous amounts of information – vocabulary, grammar, syntax – and apply it within a new cultural context. In addition, college and career readiness standards have redefined what it means to be proficient in a world language. Teachers need to have a wide repertoire of instructional tools to make a new language “stick” in their students’ heads. In this interactive session, teachers will examine the nature of language learning, identify principles of student engagement and explore approaches and activities that maximize engaged learning time.

Exhibitor Session: Effective Prompts & Questioning to Improve Language Levels

Presenters: Darcy Rogers and David McDonie, Organic World Language, Medford, OR

In order to move students through proficiency levels, the prompts must ask them to continue to produce more. Adding different questioning strategies to prompts will result in more vocabulary and consistent language growth. Using Bloom's taxonomy as a guide can improve questioning variety and interest for students. Participants will apply theory to practice by creating their own questions and prompts that progressively move up both the ACTFL levels and Bloom's taxonomy.

Session 4 - Friday 2:15 PM – 3:15 PM

Exhibitor Session: Learning Language and Becoming a Global Citizen through Social Justice

Presenters: Toni Theisen and George Stewart, Education First, Cambridge, MA

Move beyond the typical language textbook topics of food, fiestas, family, etc. to build knowledgeable global citizens. Student curiosity is naturally piqued by exploring topics of social justice since these frame the world in which they live. What does it mean to be a Global Citizen? What is the relationship between an individual and society? How are prejudice and bias created? How do we overcome them? Does an institution/culture ever have a right to censor its artists? Presenters will demonstrate ways to frame essential questions of social justice, using authentic materials to develop critical thinking and problem solving. Participants will learn ways to build intercultural competence for their students while still improving their language skills. Global citizenship is an achievable goal for students if teachers equip them with relevant cultural connections throughout their language study.

Recruitment Strategies to Keep Your Language Program Thriving

Presenter: Colleen Balukas, Ball State University, Muncie, IN

Language programs at institutions of higher education throughout the country face declining enrollment numbers. While many students still choose to minor in a second language, fewer students commit themselves to a major - and it's often this latter group that helps to keep language programs well-funded and well-staffed. In this presentation, a multi-pronged approach to increasing student engagement and enrollment is explored. Strategies focus on campus outreach, freshman engagement, and study abroad support. Strategic course scheduling and targeted academic advising are also discussed as key tools for sustaining and expanding university language programs.

Making the Most of Texts: Strategies and Activities Across Genres

Presenters: Julie Larson-Guenette, Edgewood College, Madison, WI and Jeanne Schueller, University of Wisconsin, Madison, WI

The fields of second language acquisition and language pedagogy have seen an increased focus in recent years on literacy, genres, and texts in L2 instruction. This session will demonstrate strategies to enhance and support learners' L2 reading skills by providing an overview of genres and text types relevant for language classrooms. Topics addressed include, among others, top down and bottom up approaches, reading strategies, sequencing, scaffolding, pacing, etc. Presenters will share examples from an intermediate college-level reading course (German) that can be adapted for all levels and languages. Handouts will provide participants with teaching materials and additional resources. Participants are also encouraged to bring a text to identify learning objectives, instructional goals, and strategies for classroom use.

Best of Nebraska: Transitioning to a CI Classroom: It's Not that Scary!

Presenter: Brett Avila, Sidney (NE) High School

This session shares lessons learned and best practices from the presenter's experiences in the WL classroom. He taught grammar-based, textbook-driven lessons his first year and made the leap of faith to a more comprehensible classroom, aimed to build proficiency. Like many, he was afraid to step away from the ways he observed and was taught, and from all his previous lesson plans, new textbooks, and that which was familiar. He spent a year transitioning and has implemented CI strategies over the past two years, including TPRS, TPR, Circling, PQA, Story Asking, etc. In the past three years, the changes have been well worth it: proficiency increased, teaching was more fun, and students loved it. The improvements were HUGE!

Incorporating Input: Getting Started with Input-Based Activities on Monday

Presenters: Gregory Schwab and Sonja Thrush, Carmel Catholic High School, Mundelein, IL

According to Bill VanPatten input is "language that learners hear or read in some communicative context. It is language that learners respond to for its meaning, not its form or structure." In the field of second language acquisition, input is the essential condition for language acquisition to take place. How does one get started with comprehensible input-based activities right away no matter what level or required curriculum they are required to teach? Get language into your students' heads and help bring them to a point where this input spills over and becomes emergent output. Practical tasks and activities that you can implement right away will be discussed.

How Does Your Garden Grow? Helping Pre-Service Teachers Understand and Interpret Student Data

Presenter: Rebecca Chism, Kent (OH) State University

The transition from student to teacher poses unprecedented challenges compared to years past. In an era of high-stakes testing, value-added instruction, and increased accountability, new teachers not only need to be able to accurately measure and assess student growth, they need to be able to understand how to collect and use data to improve reflection and instruction. The increasing implementation of instruments such as the Educational Teacher Performance Assessment, state teacher evaluation systems, and other assessments also necessitates further practice in this area. This session will offer suggestions to help pre-service teachers understand and interpret data in ways that are meaningful and accessible to them while providing the tools needed to inform their practice. Teacher candidates' thoughts and reflections as well as other perspectives on professional growth and transition into the profession will be included.

Differentiation with Technology-Supported Universal Design for Learning to Include Diversified Language Learners

Presenter: Xianquan Liu, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, NE

Increasing diversity in student population calls for inclusive and differentiated instruction. Universal Design for Learning (UDL) with technology support has been proved to be a promising approach for teachers to differentiate learning in an ethnically diversified classroom. With UDL approach, language teachers motivate diverse learners by differentiating presentation of knowledge, techniques of student engagement, and method of assessment. The presenter will revisit teacher and student roles in terms of how backward design, goal setting, and social constructivism interface with UDL. Research-based practices of UDL will be examined and classroom examples provided as pedagogical references to optimize differentiated student learning in an inclusive classroom.
